

Good Energy Environmental Policy

As a business driven to protect our planet from climate change, we are naturally committed to reducing our own environmental impacts to a residual state that sustains global temperatures as they are and creates a safe and just space for humanity.

We recognise that we have a duty to be a responsible neighbour to our communities, as well as providing a comfortable working environment for our employees.

As we carry out our business operations, we are committed to:

- The protection of the environment
- Prevention of pollution
- 50% reduction of our carbon emissions by 2030 including scope 3 emissions
- Continued advocacy for renewable energy
- Repeated compliance with our ISO 14001 Environmental Management System

We will ensure these achievements are met by the succeeding on the following objectives:

- Maintaining ISO 14001 certification to help appropriately manage our environmental aspects and ensure we are not harming nature and the environment
- Minimise our carbon emissions wherever possible to facilitate the transition to the net zero economy
- Comprehensively assessing climate-related risks and opportunities to ensure we are climate resilient for a just transition to net zero
- Assess our supply chain to evaluate the environmental impacts of our suppliers and positively influence their decision-making skills to lessen their own impacts and increase environmental performance
- Continually monitor the environmental impact of our business activities
- Training our employees in environmental protection practices and encouraging employee involvement in environmental improvement initiatives
- Ensuring our employees, customers and suppliers are aware of their role in supporting our environmental commitments and objectives

The implementation and success of this policy is fundamental to the success of Good Energy and must be supported by all employees as an integral part of their role responsibilities
